“ Johnny always told me he'd die in his 60s. Said he had seen it and I didn't have to worry. I wish he was right about that. Johnny was always the loudest in the room. He demanded to be heard and his voice boomed. We called him John the Fisherman. He taught me how to tie a hook properly. I've now taught that to others and the legend can live on. We were friends for 20 years and dated for almost 6. We lived in several places together and there was even a time when I made dinners for him and Joseph and Makayla. I also met Justin but he never stayed with us. I'm so glad the other two got to spend a little time with Johnny, even if it wasn't perfect. He always thought the kids were too good for him. He loved them so much, just was never good at showing it. I don't think he went more than a day without talking about them. It was a constant heartache that he lived with. My heart also aches for my children and we lived in that hurt. It held us together. I loved Johnny so much and I miss my friend.
